

A 90-day staff AI training calendar

A monthly cadence built from things you already do — no LMS purchase required.

You do not need a learning management system to start. You need a calendar entry that recurs and a trusted person to lead it. Three months is enough to build the muscle.

The 90-day calendar

Month 1 — Literacy. One 30-minute all-staff session on the four foundational terms (hallucination, context window, prompt, human in the loop). Reading the AIEOG AI Lexicon definitions out loud is fine. Then: every staffer takes the AiBI free readiness assessment for their role.

Month 2 — Practice. One 60-minute department session per week. Each department picks one task they do regularly. They watch a demonstration of doing it with an AI tool, then practice it themselves. No customer data. The output of the session is one saved prompt that the department keeps.

Month 3 — Roll-up. One 45-minute leadership review. Every department head presents: what task we tried, what worked, what did not, one example we can replicate next quarter. The bank's first internal "playbook" comes out of this meeting.

Three things you can do this week

1. Block the recurring calendar entries for the next 12 weeks before you do anything else.
2. Pick the trusted person who runs each session. It does not have to be the same person for all three. It does have to be someone whom staff respect.
3. Set the success metric in advance. At the end of 90 days, the bank should have: a written acceptable-use policy, a saved prompt library by department, and one documented quick-win pilot.

A starter prompt for your trusted facilitator

I am running a 30-minute introductory session for our community bank's staff on responsible AI use. The four concepts I want to cover are: hallucination, context window, prompt, and human in the loop. Help me draft a session outline that includes one real banking example for each concept and one small group exercise. Keep the tone conversational. Avoid jargon and avoid the words "revolutionary" and "transformative."
